He was Nathaniel McKay, former shipbuilder of Boston, politician of New York, landlord of Guthrie, Okla., and owner of Washington's new hotel, "The Dewey." He became known nationally during the campaign of 1888 by the "picture" fight he made against free trade, having thousands of illustrations of labor life in England prepared and sending them broadcast throughout the country at his own expense. VISIT TO SAN FRANCISCO DAVID

SAN FRANCISCO, May 24.-From thousands of throats yesterday morning came the lusty cheers of the men lately returned from the Philippines hurrahing for the man who sent them. President William McKinley, commander in chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, stood with bared head while two regiments of new-made veterans passed in review before him on the volunteers' around the immense square were grouped thousands of other soldiers, who looked on, filled with pride for their call-

Off to the north the windows of the long, cool-looking hospital building were filled with wan faces of those who also zon and who also returned, but did not return with the health and strength they

It was a most memorable review. Other Presidents have reviewed other troops after they have fought for the flag of the country, but never before has there been a President to greet returning troops from distant shores after hard campaigns in far-off lands. History was made yesterday.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 25 .- President McKinley will bid farewell to San Francisco this morning and, accompanied by his wife and the members of his Cabinet, will start on the return journey to the national capital. The physicians who have attended Mrs. McKinley saw their patient at noon yesterday, and at 1 p. m. Secretary Cortelyou issued a bulletin to the effect that Mrs. McKinley would be able to endure railroad travel and that the journey home would begin this morning.

The sailroad companies and Chief of Police Sullivan were notified at the same time as to the hour of leaving and all arrangements were made for the President's departure.

Mrs. McKinley was able to be up for many hours yesterday and the physicians, who called on her at noon, decided that it would be perfectly safe for her to start for the East today. It was learned in the morning that Mrs. Mcrest and she partook of nourishing food during the day. At noon the foreign Consuls stationed in this city called in a body on the President. The majority of the gentlemen were dressed in uniform, while a few
